Bibliographies on the Middle East are becoming more readily available online. A bibliography has been provided for this section because the topic is so vast that information on almost any topic can be found online. These articles are very important because they provide an excellent source for learning about one's own culture and heritage as well as gaining an understanding of other cultures through their own literature. During the Middle ages, people were forced to read widely because books were rare and expensive. Reading was part of one's education thus it became a necessity. Books represented knowledge and wisdom, therefore people were well versed in their religion, culture, history and the ways society functioned. For women this was extremely important as they were taught to be subservient to men in everything pertaining to life. For commentators of the Quran looking for comprehensive information on Arabic morphology, morphology paradigms, tajweed rules etc., scholars have provided evaluations of well known tafsir works available online. One can learn concise information about all aspects of tafsir from the commentaries that are available for free download.
